Drilling in the Carter well, northeast of the city, has temporarily stopped pending repairing of the rig builders began work Friday. By Monday morning drilling will be resumed and to use Mr. Morlock's expression, "will be pushed to the limit."

More than 1,400 feet of 10-inch casing has been set, and while progress is necessarily slow on account of the rocky formation, the hole is "open" and the aluminum tools.

The Crescent city well is also going steadily down. More than 800 feet of casing is in and driller are optimistic. John Hopkins says the formation is hard and the red beds have been left behind. The so-called "Miller well" north of the city is still in status quo and remains a mystery.
